Bible and Ecology addresses both the historical and contemporary aspects of biblical interpretation and hermeneutics related to or directly addressing ecology and the environment. Particular attention is paid to those passages in the Hebrew Bible and Christian Scriptures that are evoked in relation to global climate change, creation care, and humanity's role in relation to the more-than-human world. Looks at a variety of passages with sensitivity to how they can be read and interpreted in relation to the present ecological crisis. Covers foundational works within biblical ecocriticism such as

	of each and the forms of reading and interpretation presented by biblical ecocritics. Addresses more recent intersectional work being completed within biblical ecocriticism such as the Bible and queer ecology, environmental justice and the Bible, the Bible and animal studies, etc. Particular attention will be paid to the pragmatic aspects of these readings and approaches, namely how these readings can be incorporated into practice.
